Working towards Individual and Collective Transformation

Welcome to the Scottish Bahá'í Summer School 2013!

The Summer School is an annual event open to all and is held in beautiful Perthshire. It provides a space to reflect individually and collectively on spiritual themes and gain a deeper knowledge of various aspects of the Bahá'í Faith.

Through the theme of the school, 'Working towards Individual and Collective Transformation', we will share an opportunity to explore how the Bahá'í teachings aid us all in our efforts to contribute to an ever advancing civilization.

The courses studied will be enriched through service, artistic activities and the devotional character of the school. The content of the courses for younger participants will be appropriate to their age group, whilst still reflecting the overall theme.

The school's ethos and programme is centred on Bahá'í principles of service, love, equality and an independent search for truth.

Participants at the school all have a role in creating a sense of community in which all consider themselves active co-workers in learning and serving.

For those who are unable to attend for the full five days, it will still be possible to attend a mid-week day course.

Study Courses

1. The Pattern of Bahá'í Life

A space for questions, reflections, and a meaningful conversation about who we are and what we do.

This course will draw inspiration from the heroic lives of the early Bahá'ís, reflecting on the themes of service and sacrifice.

Why does the Guardian describe the North American Bahá'ís as the "descendants of the dawn-breakers" with the special destiny to usher in the promised day of God. And how is this to happen?
